The Media Law Resource Center, Inc. (MLRC) is a media law defense-oriented organization dedicated to maximizing free expression in the U.S. and abroad. It is therefore a condition of subscribership that an academic subscriber, as defined by the benefits outlined above, commit to the same defense orientation required of attorneys and law firms who participate as MLRC members. In particular, it is inconsistent with academic participation in the MLRC for an academic to be engaged in active litigation against a media defendant on a content-related matter such as defamation, invasion of privacy or related claims, whether the academic member is acting as an on-the-record advocate, a behind-the-scenes consultant, or an expert witness (testifying or non-testifying). A subscription for an academic would cease if the academic undertook to represent or otherwise participate in litigation in such a matter on behalf of a plaintiff against a media defendant (including any journalist, author or other individual engaged in the acquisition or creation or publication of content for mass media) in which there was a claim for defamation, invasion of privacy or related claim.
